Utility scams are on the rise. PSE&G want to help people look for the telltale signs of scams and new tactics criminals are using. For more information.

TACTICS:

- Fraudulent phone numbers: Scammers are claiming the phone number is different than the number listed on the utility bill due to technical issues.
- Fraudulent emails and texts: Scammers are using written correspondence to portray themselves as the utility.
- Door-to-door imposters: Scammers are claiming they are "responding to reports that customers are in the neighborhood."

SCAMS:

- Disconnection threat: The utility or government representative aggressively tells the customer his or her account is past due and service will be disconnected if immediate payment is not made—typically using a prepaid debit card or another non-refundable form of payment.
- Meter payment: The caller or in person scammer instructs the customer to pay with cash or a prepaid debit card to cover the costs of a new meter or a meter upgrade.
- Information request: The caller insists that a recent payment encountered a system glitch and was not completed—the scammer then asks the customer to make a false payment using a prepaid debit card or by providing personal account information.
